"WORK" BY WORK.

The High School Principal Emphasizes the Need of Action

TO SECURE GOOD CITIZENSHIP

His Liberal and Practical Interpretation of the Movement was the Feature of Last Night's Meeting, at the Fourth Street M. E. Church—Rev. Samuel Schwarm, the Other Speaker—The Attendance Failed to Show Expected Increase.

Last night's "Good Citizenship" meeting was held at Fourth street M. E. church, and the attendance showed a perceptible decrease from the previous evening, while the fair sex resumed its superiority, numerically. The principal address was by Principal H. B. Work, of the high school, and it was a thoughtful effort. The other speaker was Rev. Samuel Schwarm, of the English Lutheran church.

Professor Work said the movement had his hearty approval. It was calculated to do good to the city and he might say, for the world, since the city was part of the whole. He said it was the duty of every generation to improve the glorious heritage handed down by the country's forefathers, therefore the movement was one full of purpose and eminently to be commended. It had a specific aim—to do good for the home town, and it was better that it, like charity, began at home.

The speaker believed more in formation than reformation, so he considered the Good Citizenship agitation a movement for the future rather than to reform merely present conditions. It should be the starting point where ideas about good citizenship should go out to the growing boys and girls. It was a campaign of education. But it mustn't be an educative movement alone, that is, conceived just to dispense knowledge; it must also spur on to action. There must be developed men of thought and action, and not men of thought alone.

The title of the movement suggested that it was intended to make good citizens; to restore men to ideal relationship among men, in a church sense, a political sense and a social sense. "We want to make heaven here on earth," said Professor Work, "as near as we can make it."

There must be an observance of the Sabbath as it was intended to be, as God devised it to be, and not a day for recreation that amounted to desecration. Continuing, he said the people were departing from the ways of the forefathers. They were forgetting the maxims of Poor Richard's almanac. Frugality was departing before extravagance. This was true of governments, national, state and municipal. And so the Good Citizenship movement had a mission to perform in effecting more economical management.

The speaker thought the movement should also seek to protect the American home, and in discussing this feature, Professor Work said he was giving his ideas of good citizenship, which might be too broad for the promoters of the movement. Home life has degenerated from what it was. Parents were not careful enough of the hours or the company their children kept. The public school was blamed for not doing all, but the public school was not the guardian of the children at home.

Concluding, Professor Work said that after it was determined what must be accomplished, there must be work. Meetings, with addresses, prayers and psalms, were useful. Enthusiasm was necessary, but it should do more than enthrall. If anything was to be accomplished by the Good Citizenship movement it could be accomplished in only one way—that was by work. When the mountain wouldn't come to Mohammed, Mohammed went to the mountain. Professor Work was of the opinion that more mountains were removed by picks and shovels than by prayer. So he advised his hearers to show their faith by their works. He urged the men of influence to take off their coats and get down to work. It wouldn't do to leave it all to the preachers. The kind of men wanted were men of courage and action, tact, common sense and prudence, who didn't care for the obloquy of the movement's opponents. No movement of this character could succeed without this kind of leaders, and everything couldn't be done at one election. The campaign must be kept up, with tireless leaders, undaunted by setbacks, or the labors of a campaign, and with the forces of hearty support by the people. Professor Work prophesied the desired success for the movement.

The next speaker was Rev. Samuel Schwarm, who opened with the remark that the trouble with the Christian people was that there were asleep concerning municipal affairs. Some people said the preacher had no business to talk politics or on law and order, but the apostles didn't hesitate to tell their people as to their duties in these affairs. Rev. Mr. Schwarm said it was a popular mistake that preachers knew very little about politics. He could say the preachers were closer students of politics than is supposed.

After an interesting outline of the executive powers vested in the city, county, state and national governments Rev. Mr. Schwarm paid the tribute to the American system of government of being the most beautiful ever devised. There wasn't a weak spot in it. The speaker said the drawback was in the enforcement of the laws.

On Sabbath observance in Wheeling, Mr. Schwarm said he had seen men erecting street arches on Sunday, laying down street car rails and selling dry goods, in some cases, to Christians, and he scored the practice of "pulling" disorderly houses for the evident purpose of securing revenue to meet the city's expenses.

The speaker scored a good point when he said the blame for the evils complained of were not chargeable to municipal authorities entirely, and he suggested as the first thing to do, that people who have been buying groceries and other articles on Sunday to quit it. He agreed with Professor Work that work was imperative for the Good Citizenship movement's success. As to the lack of hope, Mr. Schwarm pointedly remarked that God isn't dead. He was a God of law and order and would be found on the side of right.

BRIEF MENTIONINGS.

Events in and About the City Given in a Nutshell.

Thanksgiving Dinner

Anything that makes the "Thanksgiving Dinner" a success is a good thing to get acquainted with. Our stoves will do that. They save work, worry, time and money. They turn out a nicer loaf, a better roast or a delicacy just as wanted, at the time wanted, with less bother, care, watching—or profanity—than any stove ever put together. Cooking on our stoves comes nearer to taking the job off the cook's hands than anything—of the stove is less than competitive stoves. They are more ornamental, more solidly built and more compact.

Gas Ranges.

Our assortment of these economical, cleanly Cook Stoves is unmatched. We secured over 400 of 'em in the different styles, shapes and grades before the advance in prices by the makers—consequently we can now sell lower than others can now buy.

AMUSEMENTS.

There was only a small audience at the Opera House last night to witness the presentation of "The Corsican Brothers" by Harrison J. Wolfe and a capable company, but those who were there enjoyed the drama exceedingly. The same company gives "David Garrick" this afternoon and "Hamlet" to-night.

Return of the Favorites.

Boyle & Graham, assisted by May Donohue, Alta de Kerman, Ed. Clark, John Donahue, Gerald Griffin, Andrew Leigh, Mead & Bennett, and a dozen more farce actors of distinction, will present that excruciatingly funny play entitled "His Better Half," at the Grand the last half of this week. "His Better Half" is particularly recommended by virtue of its characteristic divorce from such features as frequently destroy the continuity of the dramatist's purpose. Several vaudeville "turns" are interpolated, but not without sufficient respect to a plot containing all the essential elements of a well regulated stage offering, and what is more important still, is the fact that each and every one of the separate acts are quite in keeping with the hilarious tone of the farce itself.

"Sowing the Wind."

One of the strong situations in "Sowing the Wind," is the recognition by Brabazon of Rosamond, as his daughter. After a long scene between them, during which she champions her mother and womankind generally and he champions her unknown father and mankind, Rosamond exclaims with an outburst, "Do not defame my mother, she was at least a woman; so am I. Let the women stand by the women and the men by the men. Let it be fought out to the bitter end. Sex against sex." Brabazon answers, "Sex against sex, so be it; it always was, it always will be sex against sex. Then I defend my own. How do you know that your father left her falsely? How do you know that he abandoned you? Is it so certain that he was not betrayed? Sex against sex, but let the fight be fair. Let each bear its own cross." This wordy war, the climax of the third act in "Sowing the Wind," is said to be one of the strongest dramatic scenes ever given to the stage. "Sowing the Wind" will be the attraction at the Opera House, Friday night, November 24. Reserved seat sale opens Thursday morning, at the Opera House box office.

Working Night and Day.

The busiest and mightiest little thing that ever was made is Dr. King's New Life Pills.
